

No filters, saved preferences, or tailored recommendations are visible; every visitor sees the same undifferentiated content and menu structure.

Visible Chief Minister/Minister photos, RTI and RTS Act links, Government Resolutions and a dedicated Citizen's Corner give the site strong official credibility and transparency.

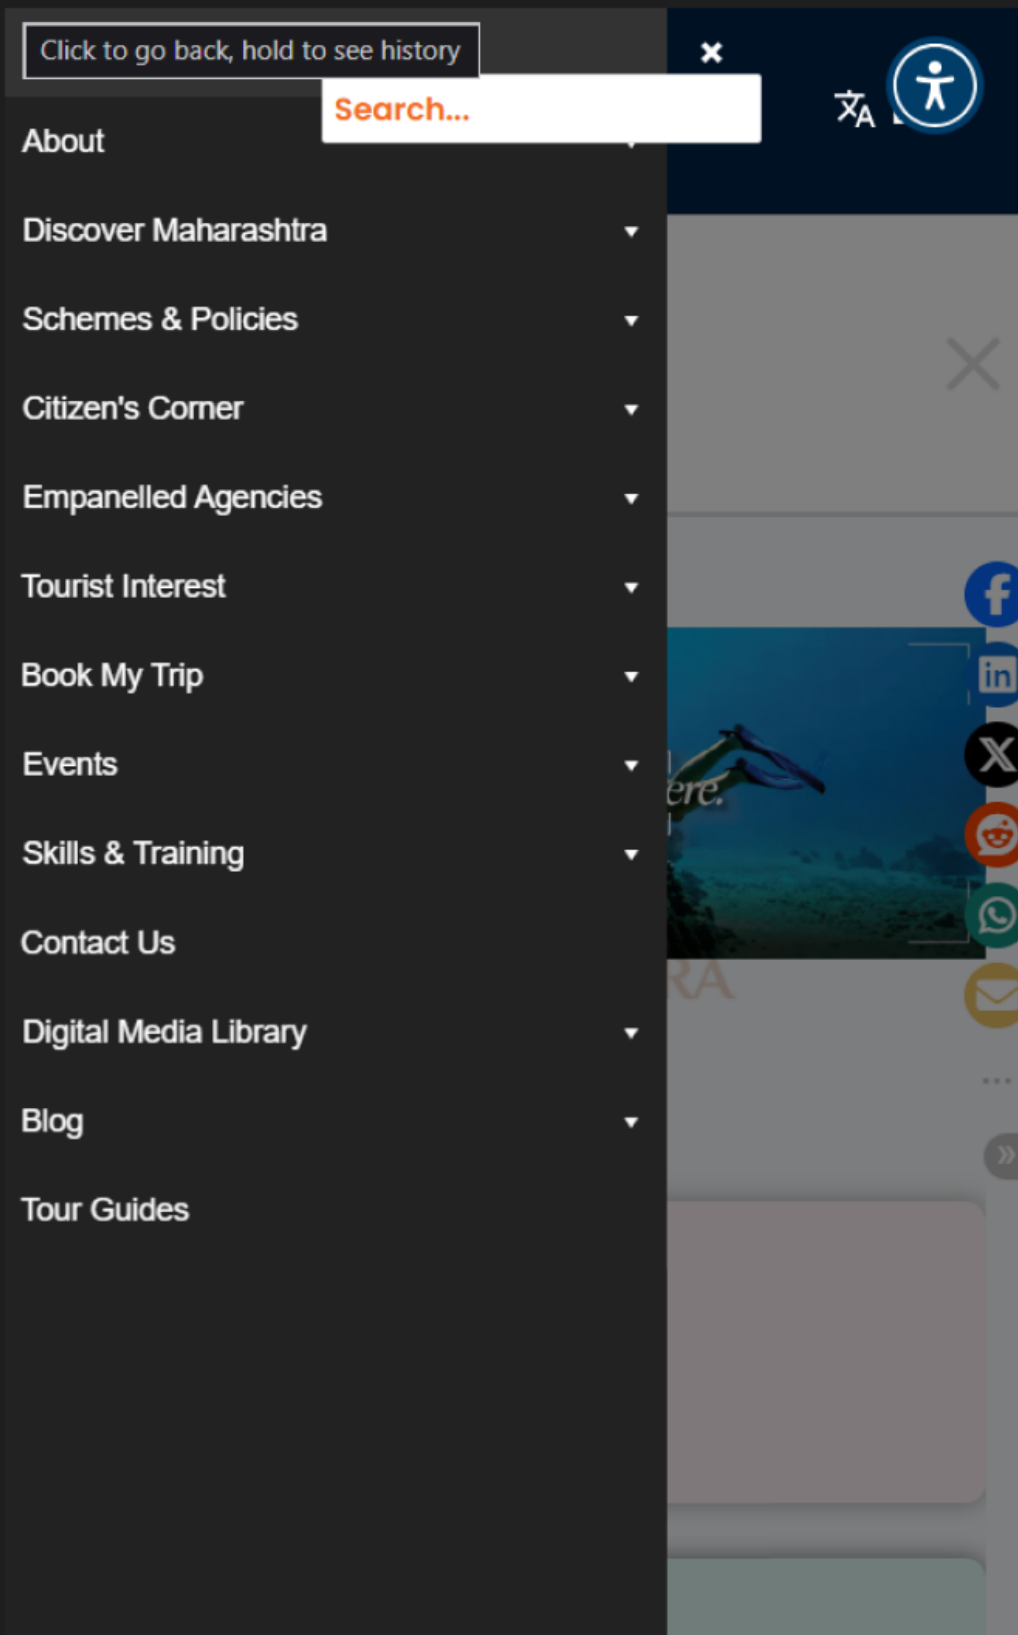

Deep menu paths and mixed administrative/tourism content make destinations difficult for general visitors to find.

District, fort, temple and beach listings follow a consistent list pattern, but the mix of tourist content with formal government elements (news ticker, official portraits, GR-style text blocks) breaks consistency between sections.

Also declares a mobile viewport and a 'Skip to Content' pattern, but with several hundred links in the mega-menu, the mobile version likely turns into a very long scrollable list.

A full-bleed hero video and clearly labelled sections (Plan Your Trip, Reasons to Explore MP, Our Stories) direct attention to the most important content first.

The thematic Explore menu (Nature, Heritage, Wildlife, Spirituality) with visual destination cards makes intent instantly clear, and the homepage's Plan Your Trip widget guides a first-time visitor straight toward an action.

The structure is shallow — Explore > theme > destination — with a 'View All' escape hatch on every theme, keeping the hierarchy to two or three levels.

A video-forward hero, generous white space and icon-led tiles feel closer to a modern travel brand than a bureaucratic portal, keeping the page visually calm.

Short, theme-led headings and card blurbs (e.g. 'Serene Pachmarhi', 'Regal Indore') are scannable and inviting to read.

A mobile viewport meta tag and a dedicated menu icon indicate the layout is designed to collapse cleanly for phones and tablets alongside the desktop experience.
